OVERVIEW

Amanda Cashman is counsel in the firm's Pittsburgh office. She currently focuses her practice on commercial and energy litigation, internal investigations, and government enforcement actions. Amanda's experience includes oil and natural gas civil and administrative litigation involving disputes related to lease terms, the calculation of royalties, surface-use disputes, and contamination allegations, as well as the representation of clients in crisis management situations. She also represents oil and natural gas clients in matters related to land use and local regulation. Amanda's commercial litigation practice also includes the representation of clients' interests in breach of contract, class action, and insurance coverage issues. Amanda has also represented healthcare providers in disputes with insurers related to the application of reimbursement rates and federal sequestration laws.

Amanda's government enforcement practice encompasses a variety of enforcement actions by federal and state agencies involving the False Claims Act, securities laws, allegations of mail and wire fraud, and environmental violations. Amanda has coordinated and conducted internal and special committee investigations regarding a wide variety of sensitive allegations. Amanda works actively with her clients to develop and implement cost-effective strategies to respond to enforcement allegations and investigation needs while recognizing and mitigating risks.
